Researchers at Mainz University Explore New Approach for Treating Alzheimer's Disease

The disease is already one of the most common health problems in the elderly, which is why experts predict that the numbers of people affected will increase over time. Researchers at the Department of Psychiatry and Psychotherapy of the University Medical Center of Johannes Gutenberg University Mainz (JGU) have recently gained new insights into how it may in the future be possible to treat patients with the currently most common form of dementia, Alzheimer's Disease.
